SYNOPSIS - LOGLINE

"The Warrior" is a visual poetry in the experimental genre that immerses the viewer in a sensory, magical, and dreamlike world in which two characters, Her and Him, constantly intertwine, separate, blend, and reunite, reminding us of the dual nature of this world.

DIRECTOR STATEMENT

"The Warrior" is a visual cinematic poem in the experimental genre. What began as a poem about the various paradoxes that govern our lives evolved into a film that defies conventional rules –a fully cinematic video art piece that took eight years to produce–.

Cinematically, the narrator's voice immerses us in a dreamlike world where we meet Her and Him, who, deep down, are each one of us: our fears, longings, desires, creations, dreams, sleepless nights, obsessions, hopes, and ecstasy—all of which take their place in our visual and auditory imagination.

The narrator's voice shares the poem with the viewer as the original music emotionally transports us to each of the experiences depicted in the piece –human experiences, but also celestial and divine ones–.

Text, voice, music, and visual narrative transport us to the essence of this universe: duality. Light-darkness, masculine-feminine, creator-creation, above-below, imagination-reality, yin-yang, person-role, essence-ego. As the original poem titled "The Warrior" –which brings this cinematic piece to life– puts it: "the whole universe into a napkin."
